Dr. Julie Radlauer-Doerfler

Dr. Radlauer-Doerfler is a leading expert in behavioral health and uses her experience to create impact with communities, systems, organizations, and individuals. Her approach is collaborative, creative and curious as she strives to educate while always learning along the way. She has extensive experience in behavioral health, public health, and organizational development for more than 25 years. Her research on structural racism in the behavioral health field has led to the development of a national curriculum designed to educate professionals how to create more equitable systems. She is passionate about addressing behavioral health challenges through accessing social support and speaks widely on the topic.

She has both organized and facilitated hundreds of national presentations, plenary sessions, workshops, and training events. Her approach is described as “innovative, intuitive, authentic and supportive” and, “she makes learning fun, she is able to talk about difficult topics by sharing her humor, warmth and personal experience”. Dr. Radlauer-Doerfler is also the co-founder of the Learning to Lead Leadership academy and has facilitated leadership development to hundreds of emerging leaders.
